Two brothers, building contractors, called a shortlisted competition between architects usually collaborating with them to have a wider range of choices for their new houses. Pitch roof was the only imposition they gave us and we came up with this idea of twin but slightly different blocks, a sort of stereometrical translation of a garden cabin , and inspired by the genius loci of what was a once the parc of destroyed villa. Dark wooden cladding and the archetypal use of the form help to create an idea of exterior unity which is denied by the different articulation of the inner spaces.
